New York: Sends the article for the Liberty Bell. "You and Caroline Weston will laugh at it heartily, and even little Anne Warren Weston will give it a patte de velours; but the young and romantic will like it." The writer is plagued by Third Party. "James Caleb Jackson is coaxing all he can to stop the Standard... and Garrison is helping him with puffs innumerable." The writer declares that the Liberator lauds the Liberty Party, that Francis Jackson and Wendell Phillips "are flourished forth on the Librty ticket" and that she expects to see Garrison put up for Governor and Edmund Quincy for Congress. "Am I to hold the Standard of moral influence all alone?" The Pennsylvania woman is seeking a union with Philadelphia. The Liberty Bell arrived four hours before the closing of the (Philadelphia) fair, at which they made upwards of $750. The state meeting surpassed anything they had ever known, "in feeling and in fruit." John A. Collins contributed much to its success, as well as an address by Dr. (David) Nelson. The writer asks if Collins could not be spared for Pennsylvania for a year or two. The "change proposed respecting the Freeman, & Standard" was carried, in spite of Collins's warning against it. Reports on pledges.

To Mrs. Maria (Weston) Chapman

Milton Hill, Milton, Mass.. The writer says that she would give the addressee $100 instead of the enclosed ten if she could, but that she cannot join her in her public interests. The writer reads and hears little on the subject of Abolition, although she loves "a black face" and "would have all free." But the writer has a distaste for public life, is "a perfect fool about politics," and has "a holy horror of societies." Although she always responds to the writings of Dr. William Ellery Channing, the writer cannot go "hand in hand" with the addressee or Mrs. Eliza Lee Follen or Susan Cabot. The writer mentions a last visit to her childhood home in Pearl St., the illness and death of her son Perkins, and other happenings. Comments on the addressee's harmony of interests with her sisters and her husband."

Darlington, England. The writer finds encouraging the numerous withdrawals from Anti-Slavery churches in America. The cotton interests are taking alarm at the "British India" movements. The writer was pleased that "the integrity of John A. Collins had been so triumphantly vindicated." The London Committee has taken up the question of slavery in the East Indies. George Thompson is dividing his labor between India and the Corn laws. The anti-bread tax agitation is progressing energetically. The writer holds forth on British politics and the prevailing injustice to the laboring classes. Believes that "Toryism is the embodiment of pride" and that to carry out "the grand republican doctrine," you must be under the influence of the spirit of the Gospel. Describes the wretched

[MWC?]

? The writer has nothing ready for the Liberty Bell.
"I don't know how to write 'articles'." James S. Buckingham,
"the famous traveller & lecturer & temperance advocate was here." While in the United States he avoided all contact with Abolitionists, whom he censured for their "harsh language."
The writer gives examples to prove that "squeamishness about words covers an enormous amount of indifference & hypocrisy."
Tells about a Moorish Mohammedan who had learned the original Irish language in the Atlas mountains while trading with descendants of the old Carthaginians. Applies the story to "the wild Irish in Philadelphia"

„Boston. A house in Hamilton Place is being considered by H. G. Chapman. It may be too large and the rent may be too high. H. G. C.'s cough is bad, but otherwise he seems well. The writer, with Wendell Phillips, Mary Chapman, and Caroline Weston, went to hear (William) Adam on the Chinese war. "He was beautiful ... & put in a thousand good things about slavery." After the lecture, Hervey Weston went to a medical party at the house of Dr. (John Collins) Warren.

Roxbury, Mass.?. The writer, calling at "the Liberator's office," found out that Garrison had received a letter from John A. Collins, whose health was better, and that Collins was writing a pamphlet on New Organization which Elizabeth Pease was to publish. William M. Chace has turned the Offering over to the writer, who luckily had copy of Anne W. Weston's ready for it. At Weymouth the children are "doing famously - especially Handy Ann Greene Chapman, - so bright as to awaken fears for her precocity - a child of judgment and genius." The neighborhood (Weymouth) is in a good state "causewise."

To Nathaniel B Borden

.(Boston). A rough draft of a letter acknowledging a donation of $10 for the Liberty Bell. The writer thanks the addressee for informing her "of the state of feeling & action on the cause in congress." Reflects on the measures proposed by "men of doubtful honesty." Cites the case of Charles Turner Torrey, who is reported as "in prison awaiting his trial as an incendiary." The writer entreats the addressee's good offices in Torrey's aid. Although Torrey has been "an enemy to the abolitionists...it matters not to them...in whose person the rights of civilization are violated."

A.L.S. 4p. 7 7/8 x 5 in.

The draft is written on blank pages of a folder advertising dancing lessons.

a Chauncy Pl., Boston. The writer, spending the day with Henrietta Sargent, had an agreeable talk with William Adam, who has come down to answer John Quincy Adams, and will lecture in sundry towns, including New Bedford. Dr. (William Ellery) Channing called in his pastoral capacity on Mary Gray Chapman, trying to persuade her to go to some church, or at least to have friends hold a parlor meeting, with Wendell Phillips preaching. Mrs. M. W. Chapman "excommunicated his church," and Mary G. Chapman mortified Dr. Channing by praising Theodore Parker. R. D. Tucker died of apoplexy. At a meeting of the Boston Female Anti-Slavery Society, a Miss Idler from the South joined the Society and bore a very violent & thorough testimony." The writer, with Mary G. Chapman and Wendell Poplar Street, Boston. The writer describes cloaks made for her sisters and herself. Dwells on the "iniquity" of Mr. Perkins, who refused his pulpit to Cyrus Burleigh and (John M.) Spear. He did, however, take up a collection for Lunsford Lane Sunday afternoon. In the evening, while eight people attended Jonas Perkins's prayer meeting, the Universalist House was "thronged to suffocation." There Lunsford Lane told his story and answered questions "in a manner admirably calculated to produce a good effect for the cause." The total collection amounted to $64. The writer reports on the health of the Chapmans at Peasey Place, and on business matters. Encloses a letter from M. Pease. "Boz arrived with Dedham, Mass.. The writer doesn't want an unsealed letter to R. D. Webb read by the addressee, because it is about the Westons. Mrs. Collins said that "Brother Cyrus? Pierce" was not alone in disapproving the articles (in the Liberator) signed "E. Q." and "M. W. C." (Mrs. M. W. Chapman); that S. E. Sewall had expressed gratitude at the recovery of Garrison that there might be no more of "those horrible articles," The reason for "Collins's sniffiness" during the annual meeting appears to have been his thinking that "there was a wish to confine the speaking to a few speakers, & to exclude others-including himself!" The writer elaborates humorously on the absurdity of this attitude & the usage accorded to himself, and on his own "hide of a Rhinoceros." As an example, he Poplar Street, Boston. The writer reports on an evening meeting at the State House. The only speech that pleased the writer was that of Wendell Phillips. "Bradburn was decidedly prosy, & Remond can't speak at all. At least he has nothing to say ..." The audience was delighted with the meeting. The next day the church question was debated, "both Rogers & Abby Kelley shewing a greater desire than is quite wise to make use of hard language ..." Joel P. Bishop tried "to bring up Isaac Krapp's affair," but J. C. Fuller stopped him. A resolve in favor of Garrison drawn up by the writer was "passed with great enthusiasm." The evening meeting at Faneuil Hall was generally considered to be "the most enthusiastic, splendid, brilliant A. S. meeting ever held in Mass."

Describes the disturbance caused by Mrs. Abigail Folsom. The writer, with Henrietta Sargent, went to see Mrs. Garrison's sister, Mary Benson, a few hours before she died. Nearly all the rest of this letter is devoted to Dickens and his wife. The writer describes in detail her impression of Mrs. Dickens and of Dickens himself at a call she and Wendell Phillips made on him. Dickens is small of stature, dresses in bad taste, and has "a good face on the whole." Most noticeable about him is his glance which seems by "its intensity to take in everything." The writer repeats remarks on Dickens made by Mrs. M. W. Chapman and Quincy. Dickens talked with the writer about H. Martineau, whose book he said that "bating a few errors, it was the best book that had been written on America." The bust of D. just finished was seen by the wri-

Weymouth, Mass.: The writer tells of her visits in Boston and of affairs in Weymouth, giving special attention to two incipient romances among her friends. Relates an incident of a colored family's sitting "at Mr. Spear's meeting" in a section where colored people were not to sit, a place "in back of the singers" being provided for them, and the resulting protest. Reports the arrival in a carriage of Henry and Maria Chapman with Anne and Caroline Weston. "H and M go to Gonives next Saturday. I thought H very poorly."

c ? a The writer describes the "stupendous horse regiments" that parade the streets "for the purpose of impressing the people of Ireland with a deep sense of the power of our rulers to keep us down if we <sup>make</sup> any attempt to struggle upwards ..."

The writer is sending the latest Nation, which is to be passed on to James M. McKim. "The Nation is the mouthpiece of young Ireland ... longing for an Irish Marathon or Thermopylae-bursting with admiration for Robert Tyler and the United States ..."

They are independent of Daniel O'Connell. The writer has received a letter from H. C. Wright and has seen a letter from C. L. Remond, and thinks "the Hundred Conventions must have been of great use to him."

Weymouth, Mass.. The writer heard Wendell Phillips give "First Impressions of Europe" at the Adelphic Union. Tells of calls made in Boston and Cambridge and gives news of various women acquaintances. Miss Fuller, the young Southerner who became a life member of the Mass. Anti-Slavery Society, fears that her abolition will separate her from her lover. David and Maria Mack are going to leave for Northampton to join the Community there. The writer describes a carriage accident that befall her when Hervey Weston drove her to Weymouth. Gives news of relatives. Tells of her plan to "raise up" a back chamber and "city of refuge" for Henry G. and Maria W. Chapman when they return from Haiti.

Weymouth, Mass., Frederick Douglass lecturing in Weymouth gave great satisfaction though the Church "looked on with distrust, saying that Douglas was got here to stop the Revival." Relates the proceedings of the local Female Anti-Slavery Society's meeting. Describes the preparations made for George Bradburn's stay at the Westons' house. The sewing meeting, also held at the house, was "a somewhat uproarious one, everybody being full of the Revival." Bradburn gave an excellent lecture to an audience which was not large, but of respectable size. A second lecture, at the Universalist house, was less well attended because it conflicted with a vestry meeting at Mr. Perkins. Describes Bradburn as a house guest. Discusses family financial affairs.

Chauncey Place, Boston. The writer has had indirect news that Henry G. and Maria W. Chapman have arrived at Gonaives. Coming to Boston, the writer found Mrs. Henry Chapman very ill with a fever. Saw Abby Kelley, who has lectured at North Brookfield and Hingham, and is on her way to Plymouth County, to raise $200; she will then have fulfilled her pledge to raise $1000 for the American Anti-Slavery Society. The writer prophesies a match between Abby Kelley and John Fiske." There has been quite an A.S. Revival at Hingham. "George Bradburn made quite a stir there." The two anti-slavery meetings in Boston went off well, with William Phillips and George Bradburn speaking. Describes the disturbance caused by Mrs. Abigail Folsom. Acknowledges receipt of Liberty Bell; has enjoyed the picture of Hayti, but wishes that land's happily emancipated people "were blessed with the more full and glorious liberty of the Gospel" (i.e. Protestantism). Mrs. Elizabeth Fry has been out of town and out of health. The writer summarizes a letter received from the daughter-in-law of Mrs. Fry expressing the latter's views. Mrs. Fry finds it difficult to write to Mrs. Chapman because she "does not feel clear in her mind about the Boston Anti-Slavery Society." The writer explains that the misrepresentation "that it is not an Anti-Slavery Society only... but one mixed up with other & debatable points... has taken firm hold on the minds of many..." The writer herself favors adhering to anti-slavery only and leaving all other questions, such as women's rights.

Dr. Farnsworth called; he was "full of troubles," and running all over town in quest of a lawyer. He thinks he will lose and "fall a martyr in the Cause." Northampton, Mass.. The writer gives a detailed account of the expenses incurred through her preparation for Northampton and New York. Warren Weston called to take leave before sailing for Havana. The risk of the voyage is his own, and business is bad. The writer describes her journey, taken with Henry G. and Maria W. Chapman to Northampton. With Henry, the writer explored a book store "where was a very respectable circulating library." Judge Lyman and his family called, also Mr. (William) Adam, and later Mr. David Lee Child. George Benson has two children dangerously ill with scarlet fever. The writer does not think Henry G. Chapman's health is improving, and wants him to see Dr. (Robert) Wesselhoert. There is a prospect of Henry G. Chapman's taking a house on 31 Rivington St., New York. The writer travelled under Ellis G. Loring's care, was met at the wharf by James S. Gibbons, and welcomed to his house. "I am sorry to say Gibbons defends his conduct in the Disclaimer." The writer saw Mrs. Lydia Maria Child "looking very bright," but said to be "scared to death" by mob threats. Relates the proceedings at the Anniversary Meeting in the Tabernacle. Of the speakers; "C.C. Burleigh did well enough; I never greatly admired him. Wendell Phillips, was as usual very beautiful & George Bradburn made his usual amount of jokes..." At the business meeting, "owing to Abby Ke [redacted] iniquity," the writer was nominated one of the assistant secretaries. Expects the question of the dissolution of the Union to be brought up today.

"Garrison in a very foolish manner has staid away," and has written a letter practically asking the Society to judge between him and the Executive Committee. The afternoon was spent discussing the attitude to be taken toward John Quincy Adams. The writer, having tea at the Charles Mariotts', was surprised at their magnificence - for Quakers. Mrs. Marriott and her sister seemed "perfect specimens of Quaker selfrighteousness." Continuing at Concert Hall at 10 o'clock; Stephen S. Foster is stirring all up, saying that politics are sinful. The dissolution of the Union has been debated, Ellis G. Loring against it, Henry C. Wright in favor. No prospect of a mob.

New York. By the Liberator the writer perceives that the reeling caused by the "Correction" is subsiding. Expresses his gratitude for the addressee's consideration in discouraging reference to the correction. "It is obvious to ourselves that we are misapprehended on almost every point of the 'correction,' both in language & purpose." The writer agrees with the addressee on the general uselessness of disclaimers, but thinks that a rule on this point would tend "to involve a want or just condescension to the weakness or ignorance of others." The writer plays on the words "moral incendiarism" and tells of cases of actual fires in his neighborhood. Contrasting "Boston policy with standard policy," the writer sees more of moral incendiarism in the latter, "not so much

Weston, Anne Warren, 1812-1890

To Deborah Weston

Ms.A.9.2

Vol.17

No.66

Summer Street, Boston. Describes a colonization meeting held by R.R. Gurley in the Temple, which the writer attended. Functioning with Gurley was Zion Harris, a colored man whose "inferior unhappy sort or appearance" the writer contrasts with "the bold free bearing of our folks such as Douglass, Lane etc." Stephen S. Foster and Thomas Parnell Beach heckled the speaker, causing an uproar. At a second meeting, attended by Caroline and Lucia Weston, Gurley alluded to Garrison as one who had "led & misled the mind of England." The writer gives family news. Ann (Greene Chapman) is going to Miss Lothrop's school. Henry G. Chapman's condition varies. Maria W. Chapman has sent for a book Consumption curable, by an English Dr.

New York, Welcomes the addressee's free expression on the subject of the "correction." The writer, who does not value his own opinion highly, is disposed to quarrel only about the right or opinion. "A spiritual Procrustes is a monster." Discusses the relativity of points of view as exemplified by Henry C. Wright's different attitudes toward the "correction" in Philadelphia and in New York-Boston. "Our object was so direct, that we did not dream of the inference & implications that have been drawn from it." The writer wants to see the addressee on his brier visit to Boston. "You have more agitation than the Standard - more fire-rocketting. Your thunder bolts are in the rough cast - Lydia, Maria Child's are polished - but I grant that Jupiter hurls both."

Discusses John A. Collins, who "appears to possess your unmeasured confidence." The writer agrees with the addressee concerning Samuel May, Jr., who, with his "excessively amiable disposition," would be troubled about treating Gerrit Smith and Lewis Tappan as they deserve. Agrees with the addressee that Third Party is inramous. "It is the most insidious form of New Organization - the most dangerous because the most plausible." Comments on the influence of Berian Green and the long-windedness of William Goodell. A strong force is needed "to make an effectual inroad on the territory of these gentlemen."

Henry is not aware that he may have only a few more months to live. The writer asks the addressee to burn this letter after reading it. The children get on very well. Little Henry Chapman is "a distressing child," but he goes to school. The writer reviews her daily schedule and domestic arrangements. Has begun a new quarter of her school, which will be as profitable as the last, though not as large. Refers to advice given respecting the addressee's school. "Poor Ann Terry Phillips is very poorly"; the Phillipses are going out of town, probably to Nahant. John A. C. has returned from Ohio and dined yesterday with the writer, who reports his experiences at length. Ohio abolitionists "had suffered themselves to be made cats paws of by old Gamaliel Bailey to help new organizations." A resolution offered to become again auxiliary to the American A.S. Society was opposed by "secret foes & weak friends - an outcry against the introduction of the Eastern quarrel - women's rights etc.etc." However, Collins effected the formation of a new state society auxiliary to the American A.S. Society, including 200 persons and pledged to raise $4000 this year. James S. Gibbons will spend the fourth of July in Boston. Summer St., Boston. The writer was very sick, but refused to call a doctor. Dr. Amos Farnsworth drove Lucia Weston from town to Groton, expecting the writer to follow in two days; she must therefore try to get well. Gives an account of the family at Summer Street, and of the departure of Warren Weston. James S. Gibbons arrived as a visitor on Sunday morning. Edmund Quincy came after breakfast, and they talked all morning. Further callers and guests afforded "quite a brilliant time." Members of the family went to see "the floral procession of Mr. Barnard's children." The Catholic Temperance procession was beautiful. Tonight the writer will remain at home, as she does not care for "standing gaping on the Common. . .

(Oliver) Stearns, invited to make such a prayer, "declined having anything to do with it." The writer recalls insults to Mr. Stearns. Quotes Mrs. L. M. Child as saying that "no one can now hear the Declaration of Independence read without thinking of the slave." Hingham and Weymouth are going to join in a celebration Aug. 1. E. G. The writer tells why she does not want to accept a teaching position in New Bedford, apparently proposed by the addressee, one reason being that she can never keep a large school again unless she wears spectacles. The writer had a very agreeable time in Groton. "Mrs. Farnsworth (mother of Dr. Amos Farnsworth?) is a very nice, lady like woman." In Boston, the writer received calls from Sarah Freeman and E. Quincy, the latter looking delicate after having the measles. Gives news of family and acquaintances. H. G. Chapman seemed no worse than before the writer went to Groton. "His great breathlessness is his difficulty." Many will go from Weymouth to the picnics in Weymouth, which will be held in a meeting-house. Henry C. To Mrs. Maria (Weston) Chapman Dedham, Mass... The writer describes a successful celebration (of West Indian Emancipation?) at Dedham, attended by from four to five hundred visitors. "George Ripley's Community came ... They excited some astonishment among the plain folk - the men being in blouses & both men & women with garlands of oak-leaves twined around their head ..." The speakers were the writer, "the tearful Dennison" (Charles Wheeler Dennison), John Pierpont, and Mr. (Philemon?) Russell, the minister of Marlboro Chapel. (G. W. F.) Allen "dispersed the assembly as efficiently as the reading of the riot act." (John T.) Hilton was the last speaker. "Mrs. [redacted] Allen was on the ground all day & enjoyed the scene highly. [redacted] nephew Fred Cabot seems a

New York. "We frequently talked of Henry G. Chapman's health with hopes & fears." Mrs. L. M. Child "placed the account of the Mammoth Cave in a conspicuous part of the paper Nat. Anti-Slavery Standard, to attract your attention." Discusses the small risk for the Chapmans in the South and the guaranty that could be afforded by letters from physicians. Regrets that "under pressure of extremest need" one cannot pass a boundary line without exposure to outrage. Prophecies that "the curse of slavery, will go out in blood". Complains of the many who live only for self. Refers to the Philadelphia riot. Favors [redacted] teaching principles. "There are thousands to whom the light [redacted] would come, were it not that Dr. Channing & such as he intercept it." The writer casts doubt on the Abolitionism of (W. H.) Furness. Comments on the participation of (Charles W.) Doanison and mentions an article by (James M. W.?) Yerrinton which refers to D. as "exceedingly gross and rude." In reference to his own letter in the Liberator about it, the writer explains that he is "jealous of our reputation for good breeding as well as justice." Describes a visit from James Boyle, who had been rescued from the New Organization by J. A. Collins. The writer tells how he inadvertently brought J. backgammon. Describes a "come outer meeting" at which Warren Allen of Walpole spoke tediously, and Boyle, speaking on the spiritual character of Christianity, scandalized three of the brethren. The writer wonders what Anne Weston thinks about employing Boyle as a Mass. agent. The Non-Resistant has been in a state of suspended animation for three months. Thinks of turning it over to A. Ballou and having him merge it with the Practical Christian. The heresies of the writer and Mrs. M. W. Chapman have alienated some readers. The writer discourses on Ben Jonson, noting his historical accuracy, and criticizes (Jane Austen's Emma). Nobody will exchange pulpits with T. Parker except (ever) Stearns.

Philadelphia. A letter about the escape of fugitive slaves. "There are now 31 persons here, men, women and children who are on their way to Canada & will start tomorrow morning." Tells about the excitement of the owners and the rewards offered for the fugitive slaves. The slaves' money was expended during the 12 days they were secreted in Baltimore. More fugitives are expected. As a final resort the writer turns to the addressee for aid, and hopes she may appeal to the Boston Female Anti-Slavery Society. In Philadelphia there is need of caution for fear of betrayal, and the management of the migration lies in the hands of a few.

•New Bedford, Mass.. The writer describes a difficult afternoon at school. "I don't see why Garrison should think Solomon Carpenter's sending for the $1000 more out of taste than his offering it ... H. C. Wright's letter struck me as mere talk. He cannot pass off separation from the Widow Stickney as a living martyrdom." The writer listened from her room to conversation between Mr. Holmes and the Beanes about the (negro) pew question. The writer received the addressee's letter tonight, and cried as long as she wanted to. The writer attended S. Hawley's church on Sunday, and in the afternoon read Jonathan Edwards's affections. "He lays such a stress on works as would furnish the ministers of the present generation."

Boston. "We have had to bestir ourselves to raise our society's pledge for Standard, & have got $50. of it at just the places where we should have looked for the Liberty Bell. So, if you can, raise a little for that." The writer is enclosing the first proof of "our report." A beautiful sketch of a bell that the writer has just made, is being sent to Philadelphia to be cut in brass for the cover (of the Liberty Bell). Wendell and Ann Terry Phillips are in their house. The money came from the Abolitionists, for most of the Hingham people stayed at home. The writer tells at length of meetings connected with a kind of New Organization movement, led by Mr. Lincoln, and quotes the resolutions offered in respect to the clergy, the Sabbath, etc. I. S. Smith remarked that "the spirit of intolerance was at the bottom of this movement," and its opponents thought it an excuse not to work with the Anti-Slavery society. Mr. [redacted] said he would not belong to the society as long as [redacted] Smith was president. This dissension may break up the society.

Oct.	To Deborah Weston	No.99

New Bedford, Mass.: The writer remembers that today is the addressee's birthday. Commends a recent Liberator. "I see Mrs. Child has been walked into in the Standard by Wm. Bolles." The writer finished reading Percival Keene, interesting, but it ended poorly. The Liberty Party is to hold a meeting at which F. P. Tracy is to address it. The writer comments on the sermons she heard Sunday by S. Hawley and Mr. Peabody. Repeats a conversation with Hawley about the death of H. G. Chapman. "I believe he [Hawley] is a man of no feeling. All there is of him is an intense personal vanity."

A.L. 2 p. 10 1/2 x 8 1/2

The same letter contains two pages addressed to Caroline Weston. H. G. Chapman died on October 3, 1842.

New Bedford, Mass.: The writer gives an account of calls she has made and her views of certain acquaintances. Having received the Liberator and the Post, the writer disapproves "of the whole spirit of the N. e. o. n. Resistance meeting." If she had been there, she would not have remained on the Executive Committee. The writer censoriously reports a town scandal. Spent the evening at the John F. Emersons. Saw in the Post that Harriet Harris's husband has hanged himself. Remarks on the preaching and appearance of Mr. Lambert. The writer's reluctance to accept an invitation for Sunday led to a discussion of the Sabbath. Mrs. Beane, whose extreme clerical views make for a  between them. She "thinks me a sinner depending on anti-slavery for salvation." Mr. Beane is going to preach on slavery. The writer will ask for

«New Bedford, Mass.» The writer asks the addressee an errand for Mrs. Bradley, Mrs. Beane's mother, who has given $5 for the cause. The purchase may be sent by Charles L. Remond, who is expected to lecture here. The Anti-Slavery fair seems to be going well. "The coloured men all feel as though the fate of the nation hung in their hands." The friends here want Wendell Phillips to lecture. The writer longs for H. G. Chapman. "I had no idea how much he was to me."

Boston. The writer wants to stay in town over Sunday. Otherwise, she would return home on account of "Ma's ill turns." "Carrison & Jackson are such fools that they have got Stanton & Leavitt with others to speak at the Faneuil Hall meeting which comes off Sunday night-no need of words." The writer called on Elizabeth Moorfield and her husband, "who is I think nephew to Judge Story" (no). Finding that the writer intended to go to "the trial," he offered to secure her a good place inside the bar.

"The trial" is presumably trial of George Latimer, fugitive slave, which was to take place before Judge Story. Cf. William Lloyd Garrison, v. III, 60 note.

New Bedford, Mass.: The writer says the addressee is overworking, especially for the Anti-Slavery fair. "It is 'Mary Weston's Fair' true enough." The writer does not like all that (Nathaniel P.) Rogers writes; he ought not to call the ministers names. Details the relations of Mrs. John F. Emerson and Mary Congdon to the New Bedford fair. The writer likes Mrs. Emerson very well and feels more at home at her house than at Mrs. Peane's. Compares Mrs. E. with Mrs. B. Deborah Weston could have a school in New Bedford any time. "Deborah appears to have been greatly liked by all her children." The writer, whose school will close Friday November 18, will leave for Boston Monday. Regrets that [redacted] could not be with H. G. Chapman in his last hours, but it was doubtless better that Lucia Weston was there.

1. The writer has been told by Deborah Weston that she has written a full account of the meeting. Adds to this account that Wendell Phillips heard Henry B. Stanton whisper, pointing to Joshua Leavitt; "It's worth a hundred dollars to us, to have him here." Edmund Quincy has been here and Samuel Philbrick called to see him about the Liberator Committee. The slaves' trial comes on Saturday. Only a few penny papers and the Courier said anything about the meeting. Joseph Tinker, Buckingham said "everything handsome" about it, regretting that the city authorities were not there "to protect the citizens from these few disturbers." Mentions the calls of Andrew Robeson, Miss F. [redacted] and Wendell Phillips, who is trying to have the Courier print a request from James B. Gray

[New Bedford, Mass.] Thanks Deborah, Emma, and Lucia for sending a bundle. The writer read aloud "about the mob" to the Beanes and to Mrs. Grace Emerson, reading more to the latter, "for I had to furbish it up in reading to the Beanes." James Canning Fuller had an anti-slavery meeting here tonight. The writer asks: "Pray how would [William Francis?] Channing do for Emma?" The writer is tired from troubles in her school. Mr. Hitchcock, "a poor pro-slavery young man," called. Describes the Quaker wedding of Susan Howland. The writer attended a meeting held by R.R. Gurley in the Town Hall. After Gurley had spoken, Charles Lenox "arose & used him up." Describes the reactions of various people. Asks for a letter, as the writer cannot get over a Sunday without news about the slave.

Hazlewood (New Bedford) Mass.. When Joshua Leavitt lectured in New Bedford, there was some disturbance owing to rowdy boys. The writer read Dickens so late that she woke up with a dreadful headache and has not been quite well since. Tells of an evening spent at Mrs. Mary Eddy's. The writer hopes she said something to deflect the abolitionists of New Bedford from voting for Samuel Sewall, the Liberty party candidate for Governor. Describes the beautiful interior of Hazlewood (home of Joseph Congdon?) J. Congdon was "shocked at the spirit manifested by the Non Resistant Abolitionists about Latimer." The writer does not feel that she should write for the Liberty Bell; wishes that they might hear something from Lord Morpeth.

«Dedham, Mass.» "The fatal firman has arrived!" (obliging the writer to furnish editorials for the Liberator). Assures the addressee of his readiness to resign the honor in her favor. "No Parisian could be more eager than I to cry out place aux dames..." The writer was so vexed with himself for having forgotten an engagement to lecture before the Adelpic Union to-night that he could not write editorials. Articles by the writer not wanted for Latimer's Journal can be used in the Liberator. Notes the omission of part of an article by the writer in the first number (of Latimer's Journal) and wishes the addressee to "intimate. . . that if articles are inserted I expect them to be so without omission or omission."

4 Court St., Boston. George Latimer has been ransomed for $400 and there will be no trial. The writer reports Marshal Lincoln as saying "he should not have admitted any ladies to the Court Room except by the general entrance." It would therefore not have been practicable for the addressee to get into the room. The writer repeats a story about Judge Harrington, a justice of the Supreme Court of Vermont in 1811. Refusing to be satisfied by all possible proofs of title to a fugitive slave made by the slaveholder's agent, the judge was asked what would satisfy him, and replied: "Nothing short of a bill of sale from God Almighty."

Cambridge, Mass.. The writer has received a circular and letter about the Anti-Slavery Fair. Believes that the recent confinement of George Latimer in jail, where the writer "had the pain to see him," will benefit the cause. There is opposition from retired sea-captains and mackerel vessel owners. The Unitarian minister preaches well and shows considerable moral courage "for a minister." I. S. Smith of Hingham lectured before the Lyceum here on Milton, with reference to present day conditions. The writer thinks that Garrison's paper has not suffered from his illness, but has been fully as "spicy." The writer would like to talk with the addressee about the "hanging matter on board Somers." Does not value the opinion of a court martial highly, "for many of the officers on our naval vessels, have as little

The writer's attention has been called to an article in the Liberator of Nov. 25, entitled "New notions about prayer," which "purports to describe" what the writer said and did in relation to a note sent by George Latimer to the churches in the city, requesting prayers in his behalf: "As the article is essentially false in one important point, & unfair in its general tone," the writer wishes to use the columns of the Liberator to make the necessary corrections. «Kennebunk, Maine.» The writer gives expression to her religious faith. Complains of the people who have "cruel thoughts in their hearts and call them thoughts of mercy." Wishes that "a true preacher of righteousness" would come to Saco and Kennebunk. The writer planned to attend the Christmas fair in Boston, but was prevented by the death of a brother. Hopes to meet Mrs. Lydia Maria Child, "for I think she preaches the true gospel." Encloses money for the anti-slavery cause from her sister Hannah and herself. Regrets that the Non-Resistant has stopped.

«Dedham, Mass.» "I have written my remarks on Elizur Wright & think they will do." The writer would like the addressee "to get «Oliver» Johnson or somebody" to look over the Old American A.S. Society's annual reports and copy the receipts into the treasury from its formation till 1840 "when the split took place," and the names of the Executive Committees. Wants to see Elizur Wright's (translation of) La Fontaine, as the writer thinks that a good motto for an article on Liberty Party may be found in one of the fables. Intends to poke fun at Liberty Party. The writer will write an order to the Librarian of the Athenaeum for the volume of Fables that contains "Tom Thumb the Great," and asks if any of them (the Westons) can go there tomorrow. "Ladies go there continually."

Notes on an Address to the Unitarian Clergy in the United States by the Unitarian Clergy in England

* ? * A preliminary draft of a report or letter about the journey of Rev. Samuel May Jr. to the annual meeting of the Western Unitarian Conference at Taunton, England in July, 1843.
Rev. May persuaded the English Unitarian ministers to send an address on the subject of Slavery to the American Unitarian ministers. A reply was sent by the American ministers in the autumn of 1844. The English address was dated Dec.1, 1843.

To Mary Weston

•Boston: Met Minot Thomas, who "appeared to be quite an Abolitionist & as he is a great Democrat too, of course we joined battle on 3d party." Arriving in town, the writer found that Maria Weston Chapman had kept a log during the absence of the writer, who now gives news recorded in it. Mr. John Pierpont is writing a piece called "Nebuchadnezzar" for the Liberty Bell. Charles Sumner has sent Maria W. Chapman a very good collection of American autographs. There should be a good meeting at Faneuil Hall tonight, with Garrison, Wendell Phillips, Dr. (William Henry?) Channing, and Amasa Walker speaking.
